

C. Heather Walker grew up in Orlando, FL. She received a B.A. with honors from the University of Florida dual majoring in Political Science and Economics.

She went on to graduate sum cum laude from the Georgetown University Law Center. While in law school, Heather interned at the Department of Justice and at the Federal Communication Commission. During her internships, she helped develop federal policies for the "No Call" list, 3G spectrum sales, cell phone E911 location rules, and international payment rules.

After graduating she stayed in D.C. and worked for a few years at a law firm advocating on domestic and international communications issues before federal agencies and on Capitol Hill.

Since moving back to Florida she has worked with several non-profits to advance policy initiatives. Most recently, she helped the Center for Health and Environmental Justice develop the Green Cleaning for Your Institute program to promote precautionary principle programs for schools and government offices.

Heather served as an adjunct and a visiting law professor at Barry University Law School and at Rollins College. She currently works at WildLaw, a non-profit law firm that assist communities dealing with toxic contamination and other environmental issues before state agencies.
